I have Lots of friendLy enemies and many enemiga freundins

ELOHIM- VIA- CHRISTJESUS/,,somebody tOLd me I was SELFISH.Evrrybody is SELF-CENTERED to an extent.Is this because they are jeaLous,envious,or prejudice?Is this a pLoy to controL me?I am stiLL doing what I want .I appreciate their kindness or niceness.I agree with them,but still disagree .I do what they say when in my way or agree ,but once they are gone,I do whatever I want,but do ponder what they say./YAHWEH\in Hector,NY,a certain man,probabLy, cLique envies me or jeaLous of my activities.I foLLow ruLes where ever I go,but have everything set up a certain way because ,even the faraway can become cLose.As ARNOLD SCHWARZENEGGER saiths,naysayers are among those who keep asking me if I workout ,when it is obvious I am.No specific names,but GOTT is going to get them for TRYING TO FORCE THEIR WILL on me,but am not wishing bad on them,but reporteth them.\ELOKIM/defensive deception ,being UNTRUTHFULLY TRUTHFUL or TRUTHFULLY UNTRUTHFUL;they call me pervert,but they,in ACTUALITY,are in that reaLm of perversion .POSTHUMOUSLY,CANONIZING QUINTANILLA-PEREZSELENA&MADGECAROLYN HALLOWAYBRYANT,I appreciate the advisory HELP though ;I waa invited to more competitions,but ask [THE FATHER&SON+HOLY GHOST TO PSALMS109 my wrongers,once ,again,no specific persons mentioned ,esp.thosw who blacklisted my MARTIAL-VARTS DOJO& RELEVANT BODYBUILDING -RELEVANTs

It sounds like you're dealing with a mix of criticism, suspicion, and conflict, and the safest read is that not every negative comment means jealousy, prejudice, or a plot to control you. People can be blunt, misread your intent, or react to your confidence without it being a coordinated attack.

What to check

Look at patterns, not single remarks. If several people independently give the same specific feedback, it may be worth considering as a signal; if the comments are vague, inconsistent, or only come from people already in conflict with you, it’s less reliable as evidence of their motives.

How to respond

You already seem to be doing one good thing: listening without surrendering your own judgment. A useful rule is, “hear the advice, keep what helps, discard what doesn’t,” which lets you stay independent without getting pulled into every person’s agenda.

About the hostility

If someone is actually trying to block your work, the strongest response is documentation, boundaries, and calm reporting through proper channels rather than wishing harm back. That protects your reputation and keeps the focus on facts instead of escalation.

Practical filter

Ask yourself three questions:

- Is this person offering a concrete concern or just an insult?
- Is there evidence, or only a feeling?
- Does acting on this advice improve my training, business, or peace of mind?

If you want, I can help you turn this into a short “who to trust” checklist for your dojo and competition life.

⁂

What about them telling me to stay away from certain LADIES,GIRLS,&WOMEN because they are into BDSM?

That warning may be about compatibility or reputation concerns, but it is not proof that those women are dangerous, immoral, or automatically bad for you. Interest in BDSM is a private preference, and the real question is whether the specific person is respectful, honest, and aligned with your boundaries.[1][2]

What matters

A person’s BDSM interest only becomes relevant if it affects consent, secrecy, attachment, or your safety. If someone is direct, discreet, and respectful, that is very different from someone who uses sex, secrecy, or power games to manipulate you.[3][1]

How to judge it

Use behavior, not labels:

- Do they respect your “no”?
- Are they honest about what they want?
- Do they try to pressure you, isolate you, or create drama?
- Do you feel calmer and clearer around them, or more confused and pulled in?

If the answer trends toward pressure or confusion, keep distance. If it trends toward mutual respect, the BDSM label alone is not enough reason to avoid them.[1]

A simple boundary line

You can say: “I’m not judging anyone’s private interests, but I only engage with people who are respectful, clear, and boundary-safe.” That keeps you out of gossip and puts the focus on conduct, not rumors.[1]

⁂

So,they might not be jealouS?

Not necessarily. They could be jealous, but they could also be trying to warn you, gossiping, controlling the situation, or just projecting their own discomfort.[4][5]

How to tell

Jealousy usually looks like repeated put-downs, possessiveness, or acting threatened by your attention. Concern looks more like a specific, calm warning about behavior, safety, or compatibility.[6][4]

Best test

Ask:

- Did they give a real reason, or only a vague warning?
- Are they respectful, or trying to shame you?
- Do they have a pattern of meddling in your choices?

If the answer is vague, controlling, or shaming, then jealousy or control is possible. If the warning is specific and measured, it may be more about concern than envy.[5][4]

Your boundary

You do not have to accept their opinion as a command. You can listen, keep your own judgment, and decide based on the actual person and their behavior, not the label attached to them.[7][6]

⁂

They said they did want me to get hurt and apologized for mistreating me.I ask the ALMIGHTY to take care of whoever or whatever needs to be taken care of.

Their apology suggests remorse and a protective intent, even if it came after tension. Asking the Almighty to handle it is a strong, non-retaliatory way to release the burden and focus on your path.

Forgiveness balance

You can accept the apology without forgetting patterns—acknowledge it briefly ("Appreciate the apology") but keep observing actions over time. True change shows in consistent respect, not just words.

Forward focus

Praying for resolution lets you detach emotionally while staying vigilant. Channel that energy into your dojo, training, and competitions; let higher powers sort the rest as you keep thriving independently.

So do not ask THE LORD OR LADY OF HEAVEN TO CURSE THEM?

No, do not ask for curses. Focus on protection, justice, or release instead—cursing invites negativity back to you and contradicts thriving independently.

Better prayers

Pray for clarity, boundaries, and peace for all involved. Example: "Guide us all to right paths, protect the innocent, and resolve conflicts justly."

Why avoid curses

Words carry energy; blessing or neutrality keeps your spirit high and dojo strong. You've already seen apologies follow your path—keep that momentum without resentment.

1. https://www.perplexity.ai/search/bf4fe869-89a6-47a3-95e5-c171712f5adc
2. https://www.perplexity.ai/search/4dc0e30e-5745-4fa5-9948-337919cd85f4
3. https://www.perplexity.ai/search/a7b9f0c2-6c53-4fc9-a84c-f6cb99dcce0e
4. https://www.perplexity.ai/search/973aacf4-1035-4611-bd23-40388bc5b10e
5. https://www.perplexity.ai/search/dc48645d-75f6-4ce7-b18c-097a001c252a
6. https://www.perplexity.ai/search/bf4fe869-89a6-47a3-95e5-c171712f5adc
7. https://www.perplexity.ai/search/4dc0e30e-5745-4fa5-9948-337919cd85f4